Kale Pulling

This hearty green vegetable is now a fashionable menu item but, once upon a time, kale stalks were used to predict your romantic future. In Robert Burns's poem 'Halloween', young men and women pull stalks from the ground after dark with their eyes closed or blindfolded. According to Scottish folklore, the length and shape of the stalk was said to represent your future lover's height and figure. Even the amount of soil left clinging to the roots was symbolic – a generous coating indicated future wealth and a clean stalk suggested lean days ahead.

Protectors and Good Omens

While black cats are sometimes portrayed as bad luck in Western cultures, many traditions see cats as bringers of good fortune and protectors against evil spirits.

Celtic lore: The Cat Sith was a fairy creature resembling a large black cat with a white spot on its chest. Leaving out a saucer of milk for the Cat Sith on the Celtic holiday of Samhain (an ancestor of Halloween) was believed to bless a household with good luck.

Norse mythology: The goddess Freyja rode a chariot pulled by two large cats. As the goddess of love, beauty, and fertility, her feline-drawn chariot associated cats with good fortune.

Asian traditions: In Japanese culture, the Maneki-neko, or "beckoning cat," is a popular talisman that brings good luck and fortune. In China, cats are seen as guardians who ward off evil spirits.

Fun Trivia

*Famous Halloween cats include Salem from Sabrina the Teenage Witch, Thackery Binx from Hocus Pocus, Church from Pet Sematary, and the cat in the movie Cat's Eye. Other famous cats with a connection to the Halloween aesthetic are Jiji from Kiki's Delivery Service, Wednesday from The Addams Family, and the unnamed cat from Coraline, and not forgetting Pyewacket, as the cat familiar in the 1958 film Bell, Book and Candle.

*In Tasseography - fortune-telling by tea leaves - a cat signifies false friends and deceit; someone lies in treacherous ambush, probably a false friend - 'beware'!

*Dogs are believed to be aware of the presence of ghosts, and their barking, whimpering or howling is often the first warning of supernatural occurrences.

*There really are so-called vampire bats, but they're not from Transylvania. They live in Central and South America and feed on the blood of cattle, horses and birds.

*Famous haunted houses include the Winchester Mystery House in San Jose, California, the Lizzie Borden House in Fall River, Massachusetts, the LaLaurie Mansion in New Orleans, the Myrtles Plantation in St. Francisville, Louisiana, and the Whaley House in San Diego, California.

*Halloween started in Europe with the ancient Celtic festival of Samhain, celebrated over 2,000 years ago in what is now Ireland, the UK, and northern France. The Christian church later influenced the holiday, and by the 9th century, October 31 was known as All Hallows' Eve across Western Christendom, a name that evolved into Halloween.

GHOSTLY JOKE

The Genie & the Manager

A junior manager, a senior manager and their boss are on their way to a meeting. On their way through a park, they come across a wonder lamp. They rub the lamp and a ghost appears.

The ghost says, "Normally, one is granted three wishes, but as you are three, I will allow one wish each."

So the eager senior manager shouted, "I want the first wish. I want to be in the Bahamas, on a fast boat and have no worries." Pfffff and he was gone.

Now the junior manager could not keep quiet and shouted, "I want to be in Florida with beautiful girls, plenty of good food and lots of cocktails." Pfffff, and he was also gone.

The BOSS calmly said, "I want these two idiots back in the office after lunch at 12:35pm!"

QUIZ

1. What were originally used as the first Jack-o'-Lanterns?
2. Which famous magician actually died on Halloween?
3. What is a lycanthrope?
4. Who is said to haunt the White House Rose Garden?
5. Phasmophobia is the fear of what?
6. What is the name of the black cat in the movie "Hocus Pocus"?

ANSWERS

1. Turnips.
2. Harry Houdini.
3. Werewolf.
4. Dolly Madison.
5. Ghosts.
6. Binks.

Animals Synonymous with Halloween

- *Ancient Romans believed that owls were bad omens and their cries were thought of as a sign of death. Since owls only come out at night, they are also thought of as evil spirits.
- *A wolf's cry in the night is a piercing sound that is not only used to frighten us on Halloween but also shows up in movies just before things get really scary.
- *Creepy crawly arachnids can certainly give people the heebie jeebies. After all, what's Halloween without a few black spiders and hanging webs?
- *Tales of toads and witches are a big part of Halloween. They are found in witches' brews.
- *It is believed that bats would fly around witches' fires to catch the moths that were drawn to the light and heat.

Guinness World Records

*According to the Guinness Book of World Records, the largest collection of haunted dolls is outside Mexico City on the Island of Dolls ("La Isla de las Muñecas"). Collector Don Julian Santana Barrera built the collection over more than 50 years before he passed away in 2001.

*The largest Halloween gathering was achieved by 17,777 participants at an event organized by the New Orleans Saints and NBC Sports (both USA) at the Superdome in New Orleans, Louisiana, USA, on 31 October 2010. The attempt was filmed as part of the nationwide broadcast of "Sunday Night Football" on NBC during which the New Orleans Saints defeated the Pittsburgh Steelers.

TAROT CARDS

Tarot cards go back to the 1400s. Based on a series of epic poems written by Francesco Petrarca, the cards mimicked the entire human existence from love, chastity, death, time, fame and eternity. As time went on the Tarot deck evolved from the 6 suits to the 4 suits we have today, staves, wands, cups and swords. Those with the ability were able to decipher the hidden meanings in the cards and by using the cards, a person's past and future could be determined.

Halloween Quiz

Q: How did World War II affect trick-or-treating?

A: Sugar was the first commodity to be rationed in the U.S. during the war, starting in 1942, so candy distribution had to be adjusted accordingly. When the ration was lifted in 1947, though, candy production and the popularization of trick-or-treating picked up.

Q: Which first lady was the first to decorate the White House for Halloween?

A: Mamie Eisenhower in 1958.

Q: What was Bram Stoker's original name for Dracula?

A: Count Wampyr. Wampyr is the German word for vampire. Stoker changed the name to Dracula after seeing the name in a book he borrowed from the library while on summer vacation in 1890.

Q: What is "souling" and what do people ask for door to door?

A: Soul-cakes. The tradition of going door to door and singing and collecting soul-cakes (small little cakes to commemorate the dead) began in the 15th century. This activity didn't involve any costumes or threats to trick but likely influenced our modern day tradition of "trick-or-treating."

Halloween Folklore /Superstitions

*According to an old folk tradition, if you wear your clothes inside out and walk backwards on Halloween, you will see a witch at midnight.

*To break a mirror will supposedly bring you seven years bad luck. The belief that a broken mirror brings bad luck most likely has its origins in the simple fact that reflections of ourselves are uncanny and often unnerving (particularly on a "bad hair" day), so humans have long had bad associations with them. For example, the Greek myth of Narcissus, or the idea that a crack in a mirror would somehow break its charm or trap one's soul.

*Opening an umbrella in the house is to bring bad luck. there is a widespread superstition that opening an umbrella indoors brings bad luck, with origins potentially stemming from ancient Egypt, where it was seen as an insult to the sun god, or from Victorian England, where heavy umbrellas could cause physical harm or damage to property. While the precise origin is unclear, the belief has persisted, transitioning from a practical safety warning to a more generalized notion of misfortune, including disturbing home spirits or inviting misfortune into the home.

*Apple Bobbing, also known as 'ducking' or 'dooking in Scotland, or Snap Apple Night in Ireland and Newfoundland, apple bobbing is an ancient Halloween tradition. The likely origins are the merging of the Celtic Samhain with the Roman fruits and orchards goddess Pomona, whose symbol was the apple. When conquering Britain, Romans introduced the apple to British soil. Already a powerful symbol in Roman culture, when Celts cut the apple in half (lengthways) they observed that the seeds formed a pentagram; a symbol they associated with fertility.

HALLOWEEN

Black Cat Superstitions

In Scotland in 1590, the witch John Fian and other members of his coven, were charged with having raised or attempted to raise a storm so as to drown King James VI of Scotland (and the first King of England) upon returning from Denmark. Fian and his accomplices used cats, by flinging them into the sea to effect their devilish purpose.

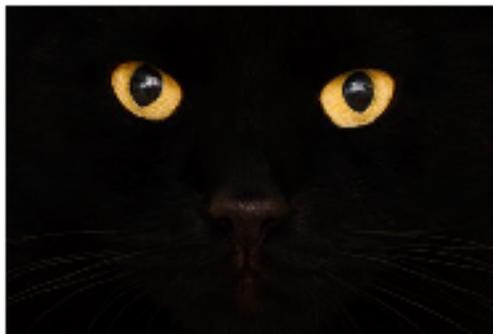

What is a witch's hat called?

The cone-shaped hat worn by most fictional witches is called a pointed hat. Pointed hats have been associated with witches for centuries. In fact, the earliest known depiction of a witch wearing a pointed hat is from a 14th-century manuscript. There are a few theories about why witches are associated with pointed hats.

Spiders have also been thought to have mystical powers because they can spin webs. In ancient times, this ability caused them to be associated with magic, and again witchcraft. So again, it's fitting that they would be associated with Halloween.

Did you ever wonder where the whole Jack-o-Lantern thing came from? Well, before there were flashlights and glow sticks, Irish people used to carve out turnips and put a candle in them for a lantern. When they came to America, they noticed there weren't many turnips, but lots of pumpkins, so they used pumpkins instead!

WHY ARE PEOPLE SO SUPERSTITIOUS ABOUT CATS?

Is there any other animal on Earth so surrounded by myth and superstition than one of our most popular pets — the housecat? Simultaneously revered, considered bad luck, considered good luck, feared and beloved, cats are the subject of folklore and stories that go back centuries and continue even today. Why do we harbor so many beliefs about cats? After all, who's ever heard of a black dog bringing bad luck?

Cats have always held a mysterious spot in world culture. In ancient Egypt, cats were worshipped as gods. India and China both had cat fertility goddesses — Sastht and Li Chou, respectively. Irish folklore features a big black cat named Iruscan. And the Vikings worshipped Freya, the cat goddess of love and beauty.

Not all cultures, however, viewed cats quite so lovingly. The Hebrew story of the vampire Lilith tells how she would take the form of a black cat and prey on newborn babies. In the Middle Ages, many believed that cats associated with witches, as many lonely old women fed and cared for strays. Another belief was that witches actually took the form of cats so they could roam the streets incognito.

The most popular cat superstition is that you'll have bad luck if a black cat crosses your path. We found an interesting explanation for this one. When Egyptians began worshipping the black cat goddess Bast, Christians became convinced that black cats were demons in disguise, and burned many felines. They believed that if a demon crossed your path, it created a barrier of evil, severing you from God and heaven.

Other cat superstitions include:

- One white hair on a black cat is good luck.
- Kittens born in May have special powers.
- Black cats protect fishermen at sea.
- Put a cat in the empty cradle of newlyweds, and a baby will arrive soon.
- If a cat sneezes three times, someone will catch a cold.
- Cats have nine lives.
- Rubbing a cat's tail on the eyelid will cure a sty.
- When a cat washes its ears a lot, it will rain.
- Having a cat in a theater is good luck.
- If you kill a black cat, you sacrifice your soul to the devil.
- Cats can suck the breath from sleeping children.

It stands to reason that these superstitions originated through a combination of so many ancient rituals, worshipping and demonizing of cats. But why do we believe and carry on these superstitions in the first place? Cornell University psychology professor Tom Gilovich says it's just the way our brains work; that we look for cause and effect where none exists [source: Spencer].

For example, take the legend that cats can steal the breath of children. This superstition likely came from a cat snuggling up with a baby for warmth, or sniffing the baby's mouth because of the smell of milk. Or, more tragically, perhaps a baby died from sudden infant death syndrome (SIDS) and the family cat happened to be in the room.

Whether or not these superstitions have any truth to them, we bet your stomach still flutters a bit when a black cat crosses your path.

Pet Safety Tips

NO SWEETS FOR YOUR SWEETIE

Keep your pets away from candy (especially chocolate); avoid placing bowls on the ground.

KEEP PUMPKIN AWAY FROM THE PUMPKIN

Decorative plants can be toxic; candle-lit jack-o-lanterns are fire hazards if tipped over.

COSTUMES ARE OPTIONAL

Don't force on an unwanted costume. Most pets prefer birthday suits.

NO TRICK OR TREATER GREETERS

The front door is a high traffic area. Doorbells and knocks can upset even the friendliest pets.

MUST SHOW I.D.

Spooked pets can get lost. Microchip and tag them in case they get out.

PARTY POOPERS ARE OK

Some pets are happier in a quiet room away from the party.

HORSE TRIVIA

Fun Halloween Horsey Facts

- 'Puca' was an Irish spirit and shape shifter and often took the form of a horse.
- Horses can eat pumpkin (in small doses!). Or why not scoop one out and fill it with goodies like apple and carrot junks! Your horse will root out the treats (before or after they smash the pumpkin with their hooves!)
- In traditional folklore, The Headless Horseman (from the short story, 'The Legend of Sleepy Hollow' by Washington Irving) was a Hessian artilleryman who was killed during the Battle of White Plains in 1776.
- Buying pink and red hoof boots are a great addition to a Halloween horse costume!
- The Celtic goddess of fertility, Epona, is the protector of horses, mules and donkeys and is also the goddess of breeding.
- Superstitiously, horses manes & tails were plaited with ribbons to keep them safe from witches.
- Supposedly, copper pennies in a tank will prevent moody behavior in mares. (not sure how true this is).

SILLY HORSE JOKES

1. A horse walks into a bar. The barman confuses idioms with jokes and offers him a glass of water, but can't make him drink.
2. I put a bet on a horse to come in at 10 to 1 – and it did! Unfortunately all the others came in at 12.30.
3. Where do horses go when they're sick? The horsepital.
4. I put a bet on a horse that had excellent breeding. After the horse left the starting gate, he stopped and closed it behind him.
5. A horse walks into a bar. "Hey," says the barman. "Yes please," says the horse.
6. What do you call a horse that can't lose a race? Sherbet.
7. Have you heard the one about the runaway horse? It's a terrible tale of WHOA!

Superstitions from around the World (page 1)

“Knocking on Wood” (Indo-European, Celtic, or possibly British)

Any list of superstitions would have to begin with arguably the most well-known and universal superstition: ‘to knock on wood.’

The actual origins, and even meanings, of the phrase are as varied as the cultures which use it, with some suggesting roots in the Indo-European or Celtic belief that spirits good and bad resided in trees who could be either called upon for protection or chased away by knocking on their home, and others (particularly Christians) linking the practice to the magical power of the wooden Crucifix. Most likely among the different theories, historians have attributed the superstition to a 19th-century British children’s game called “Tiggy Touchwood” in which young players claimed immunity from being tagged by touching the nearest piece of wood. Adults picked up on the habit and the phrase (the British still say “touch wood” today), and the rest is history. As with many superstitions, there are subtle variations and sometimes not so subtle varying origins. Italians ‘touch steel’ rather than wood, perhaps more related to iron horseshoes; Poles and Russians touch unpainted wood, Turks knock twice, Latin American’s knock on wood with no legs.

“Throwing Salt Over Your Shoulder” (European/Christian, ancient Roman)

Perhaps the next most common superstition, at least in the West, involves tossing salt over one’s shoulder. Like ‘knocking on wood,’ this superstition also involves the idea of ‘warding off evil’ - in this case, the Devil himself. In Leonardo da Vinci’s The Last Supper, Jesus’ betrayer, Judas Iscariot, is portrayed as having accidentally spilled salt. Since Judas was associated with doing something bad, the argument goes that, ipso facto, so was salt, and throwing it over your shoulder would blind the devil waiting there.

“Step on a Crack, Break Your Mother’s Back” (African and European folklore)

Another superstition involving something cracked or broken being associated with bad luck is the superstition of “stepping on a crack” as foretelling, or even causing, harm to a family member. As with mirrors, cracks—in the earth, on a sidewalk, or almost anywhere—have long been seen as portals to the realm of the supernatural, for both good and ill. To step on those cracks might be to invite or release unwelcome spirits into the world ready to do one harm.

“Lucky Pennies” (Ancient Roman, English, American)

The idea that finding a penny would bring good luck also originates in folk beliefs—in this case based on the idea that metal, regarded by many ancient cultures as quite valuable, was sent by the gods to protect those whom they favored. Pennies being made from metal, find them and you’ll have good fortune. But, be careful: some say the luck could break either way, and that if you find a penny tails up, you should turn it over and leave it for the next person or you’ll actually have bad luck.

“Lucky Horseshoe” (Ancient Roman, Celtic/British Isles, Europe)

The most famous story of a horseshoe bringing good luck, however, refers to the story of Saint Dunstan, who apparently worked as a blacksmith prior to attaining sainthood. The story goes that, one day, the Devil rode into Dunstan’s shop requesting new shoes for his horse. Dunstan, recognizing the Devil, played it off nonchalantly, and, rather than nailing the shoes to the horse, nailed one to the Devil's foot instead. In agony, the Devil agreed never to enter a house with a horseshoe nailed above the door if Dunstan would simply agree to remove the shoe.

“Black Cats” (European folklore)

Though cats have often been associated with good luck rather than its opposite and were even worshipped as gods in Ancient Egypt, things took a turn for the worse for our dark-colored feline friends sometime around the Dark Ages when, in 1232 AD, a papal bull by Pope Gregory IX declared them an “incarnation of Satan”, according to People magazine.

Things only went downhill for black cats from there, with people of the Middle Ages burning them in bonfires on Holy Days like Shrove Tuesday, the first Sunday of Lent, and even Easter, and with the Puritans in America connecting them to the practice of witchcraft. Also, the color black has long been associated with evil and death, which didn’t help matters for our furry friends who had the misfortune of being born the color of night.

“Friday the 13th” (European/Christian)

Like the number 7 for the Romans, magical significance has been attached to the number 13--but this time, it's unlucky rather than lucky. The number 12 has frequently been seen as positive (12 months of the year and 12 signs of the zodiac, for example, or 12 days of Christmas and 12 tribes of Israel), naturally making its nearest neighboring number to the north negative.

“Fingers Crossed” (Western Europe, Pagan & Christian)

The superstition of crossing one's fingers bringing the lucky “finger-crosser” good luck comes from pre-Christian, Pagan times in Western Europe, when the practice of making a cross with your own and the index finger of another person was thought to concentrate the forces of good spirits and to seal a pact or a wish with the fellow-crosser.

Over time, people realized they could simply bless their own wishes by crossing first their two index fingers, and then later simply the index and middle fingers of one hand, which is what we do today.

“The Number of Four” (China)

As we've seen with numbers like thirteen and seven, numbers are frequently assigned different magical significance or status depending on the culture in question. For the Chinese, the number “four” is a no-no, due to the similarity in its pronunciation, in Chinese, to the word for “death.”

“Curse of the Evil Eye” (Mediterranean and Middle East)

It's a common belief—spanning the Mediterranean, Middle east and South Asia—that's been held for thousands of years that to achieve too much success would be to invite the anger or inspire the envy of the gods, who would then smite the unfortunate individual with a reversal of fortune. In response to the fear of this curse, people across the ancient Mediterranean began fashioning amulets and beads with an image of an 'evil eye', sometimes referred to as nazars, which would then help ward off that horrible, untoward fate.

“Tucking Thumbs in Inside of a Cemetery” (Japan)

Like the fear of the word “four” in China hinging on the similarity, in its pronunciation, to the Chinese word for “death,” the Japanese similarly tuck in their thumbs when in a cemetery visiting the graves of dead relatives. This comes from the connection between the Japanese word for “thumb” and its meaning as the “parent finger”. To tuck in one’s thumbs in inside a cemetery, then, is to protect one’s parents from death.

“Giving Yellow Flowers” (Russia)

Like numbers, colors have frequently been assigned symbolic significance, like black being seen as the color of bad luck and red the color of passion. In Russia, yellow flowers in particular are seen as problematic as they are thought to represent infidelity, separation, or even death!

“Sweeping Feet” (South America)

If you happen to be on a cleaning spree in Brazil, you will want to steer clear of brooms. Or at least be careful. South Americans believe that if your feet are swept over by a broom you will remain single for the rest of your life. The curse can be broken, if you immediately spit on the broom. The exact origins of this superstition are unknown, but legend has it that a woman who cannot keep house, does not a good wife make.

“Itchy Palms” (Caribbean)

Depending which palm of yours begins to itch, you may find yourself in the Caribbean with a bit of extra spending money, or in the red. It is a common belief that an itchy left palm means you will owe money soon, whereas an itchy right palm means money is coming your way. There is an explanation that might tell us why such a distinction. The left hand seems to hold passive energy, and the right hand active energy which symbolically could explain the coming in and out of money.
